MUTUAL LIFE OFFICE.
PROFITS BELONG EXCLUSIVELY TO THE MEMBERS.
Persons insuring their Lives should consider what SECURITY granting of certificates to existing Denominational schools and the 20th section enacts that general religious teaching as distinguished from dogmatic and polemical theology should form part of a secular education; that is that the books which contain the cardinal truths which all Christians alike believe in shall be used in the schools, supposing the parents do not object. If the parents object they will not be used. A Jewish child, for instance, would not be taught these lessons if his parents intimated that they did not wish to have their children study the system of religion reported by the Government of this country. I have seldom intimated some of the difficulties which had to be met and overcome by this Council of Education. There are none so great as difficulties to which for a moment I would like to draw attention. The Council of Education has now in its hands the education of the whole of the Jewish community. We had the thousand persons here present who should be great varieties in the individuals forming this great crowd; and it must be manifest to all of you that it is a difficult thing to collect one thousand persons with natural aptitude to acquire the knowledge and skill necessary to become good teachers. The difficulty is multiplied by the zeal of excellent and worthy persons wishing to become teachers who have no other means whereby to attain their ends, save by the study of the science of good character and anxious to become teachers; but on only be examined by trial whether they are fit or not. The Council, therefore, in order to guard against the possibility of persons who are not fit to be teachers, and who should never be there, persons who, after undergoing the necessary probation, turn out, in the opinion of the officers of the Council, as never likely to succeed in the discharge of their duties, and who are a hindrance to the school and become teachers, still they are fallible men and women, sent out into the world under circumstances of great temptation, distant from four hundred miles from their homes, and far from the friends and relatives who are their support and attainments, important members of society, and who are thrown into company and led to contract habits which might be entirely foreign to those to which they were accustomed. Therefore it is important that every head of a family should be as considerate as he can of the position and character of these teachers; and these teachers should be treated as persons occupying very responsible and responsible positions. An important consideration should be entertained for them, such as they should be entitled to, and persons among whom they are placed should give them advice if they show any incipient tendency to fall away, as the future welfare and happiness of the children depend more upon the rectitude of conduct of the teachers in their separate callings than under circumstances affecting their worldly condition. It is happy to be able to believe that, notwithstanding the difficulties that must be in the way of collecting this large body of men into the school service, and the difficulties in Council of Education, as a body of teachers, are entitled to their merits to the respect and confidence of the country. Any one who will get the report of the Council, which is a full and complete exposure of the present state of the education of the country, will be struck by the high character of their observation, will agree with me that we have a most respectable and efficient class of teachers under the management of the Council at the present time. We have been fortunate in securing a number of enlightened and upright officers in the shape of inspectors. And these gentlemen, whose duty it is to travel all over the whole of this extensive country, and to examine the schools, have shown an impartial and just estimate to the teacher and the children. I say that these gentlemen, on the whole, have carried out their duty with a high and noble spirit, and have guarded themselves against all kinds of favouritism. They have reported upon the state of things they have found in different schools in a manner which is perfectly fair and just. Of course, I do not mean to say that they are perfect in every respect, but I think singularly fortunate in securing the services of these gentlemen to act as inspectors. Another difficulty which property safer and more valuable from the fact of its being in the hands of the community. It is our duty to take an interest in the promotion of the welfare of all men, we have the difficulty of the parson, and that is in general, because just in proportion as persons are ignorant of the principles of morality, and the duties of a parson does to an ignorant member of his flock and tells him he will incur his displeasure by doing certain things, the parson is generally slow to do it—slow to tell his children of the things we have a formal enemy. He would not be formidable if he could force his will down; but when he goes behind our backs and persuades people to do things which are in defiance. And when the minister goes to the people and says if they send their children to school he will be angry with them, and that they shall be punished, and that they shall be in trouble, and quail, and say that they will withdraw their children from the schools. For my part I think that, in these days of religious liberty, when we wish to place our future-subjects in the way of the broadest and most liberal burning shame that people are not likely to their duty as parents, and to send their children to school. They can be best instructed. But, notwithstanding all these reasons, the Council of Education has not made steady progress. That progress will be best seen in the results and multiplication of schools. I have already mentioned that the first school when the Council of Education was called into existence in 1867, was put together before this school was in existence—at present time, without this school,—for these figures were the first two years of its existence. 1867-68, 1868-69, the body established fifty-five new Public schools. Fifty-five schools like this all over the colony. The next year, 1869-70, the number increased to 100, and the number. These schools were in every instance established on the application of the people themselves, as the Council of Education had no authority to establish any school at all discriminations. There were no Catholics and Protestants who petitioned the Council of Education, and they were not asked to support them; but when this fact became known, the heads of the Council of Education were very much surprised that they were not saying anything.

advantages of these schools as any other class in the community. (Chern.) The Council of Education during 1867 and 1868 established 55 Public schools, and aid 103 provisional schools. (It will be recollected that these are schools that come into existence partly by private effort in places where there are not twenty-five children and intended to develop into Public schools.) And we have established thirty-eight of these.
